Introduction

Get Set! (for 2018!)

Halloran has been coming here for years to meet with life science companies looking for industry expertise. Whether it's getting a small company off the ground or helping a large organization become more efficient, we're here to ultimately make life science companies better at what they do. That's why we're partnering on this year's BioWeekSF.

Over nearly two decades, I have built a successful consultancy of experts who are dedicated to the mission of improving human health by providing the expertise that allows our clients to remain innovative and successful. We're familiar with the challenges of navigating such an eventful week, so keep this guide on hand to make the most of your time.

My team and I will be available throughout the week to share our best practices in navigating life sciences over the past year. To learn more about Halloran, visit hallorancg.com or contact Stephanie Toro at storo@hallorancg.com so we can set up a meeting!

Welcome

Dear Colleagues: Welcome to JPM Week in San Francisco

As the world's largest trade association representing the biotech sector, BIO understands that deal-making is the lifeblood of our industry.

We are now entering an unprecedented era of scientific breakthroughs that makes it more important than ever for you to find the right partners and investors to bring new discoveries to market.

For the past 25 years, our mission at BIO has been to help you succeed and, importantly, champion the significant breakthroughs being made in the biotechnology field. To benefit the industry and to support our more than 1,000 members, BIO is offering complimentary access to BIO One-on-One Partnering™ during the 2018 J.P. Morgan Healthcare Conference (JPM) week. In addition, we are making meeting space available at affordable rates at the Marriott Marquis near Union Square.

JPM week can be a crowded, hectic few days. BIO's One-on-One Partnering system helps make it less so by giving you a platform to organize your time; efficiently arrange meetings; learn about receptions and events; and connect with biotechs, investors, in-licensors and others in the life science community.

The system allows you to search through a robust network of companies and investors to identify the right prospects and begin a direct dialogue with potential partners. Your meetings are seamlessly integrated with your Outlook/email calendar, saving you time during this strategic and busy week.

BIO is committed to helping you develop the relationships and acquire the knowledge needed to bring your next major discovery to the world. Through our portfolio of global events, including the BIO International Convention – the world's largest biotechnology conference – BIO facilitated more than 50,000 partnering meetings last year alone.

So on behalf of all of us at BIO, thank you for making deals that are making history. I hope you have a productive week.

Jim Greenwood
President & CEO
Biotechnology Innovation Organization (BIO)

J.P. Morgan Events: A Vehicle for Buyers and Sellers to Forge New Connections

By Dennis Ford, Founder & CEO, Life Science Nation (LSN); Creator of RESI Conference Series

Today, life science conferences still lead as a place to make new business connections in addition to accessing the latest information on the advances in drugs, devices, diagnostics, and healthcare IT, but I will posit that if information-based conferences don't get partnering right, they will become vulnerable, as there is a distinct and growing need from both buyers and sellers to build business connections at these events.

A lot of the information-based, super-technical scientific conferences that cater to academia and very early-stage discoveries have found themselves in the crosshairs of big pharma and other large partners who are moving upstream to find technology that isn't already identified and partnered up. This is a reason why these early stage scientific conferences are now in need of a partnering component. And to do partnering correctly, the conference provider should understand that it takes a high amount of human resource allocation; it is expensive to fund, and requires deep curation of a clientele database for each conference iteration. LSN has discovered that our database curation begets savvy list management, which in turn allows us to target constituents and provide them with customer support and training to use the partnering system efficiently.

JPM Week is a prime example of information-based conferences turning into relationship-based conferences.

Based on the five years of experience in the partnering conference marketplace, I will say this: Great partnering is very hard to get right, it's resource intensive and it is "high touch". You do successful partnering by creating a consistent dialogue with your constituents. This entails focused communications via newsletter promos, emails and telephone canvassing. You need a dedicated staff who reach out (yes, talk with!) and understand both the buy-side and sell-side needs of the clients. The staff's job is to talk to clients and understand their needs and keep a record of those needs, what technology they are interested in, and who they are seeking to meet. If you initiate and continue this compelling dialogue, it soon turns into a relationship, and having a direct relationship with your clients is the holy grail.

Lastly, conference providers should want great partnering NOT "me too" partnering. For example, LSN's style of interactive dialogue and relationship building through business development is very different than that of information-based conference organizations. LSN's thesis is that we are NOT a conference company; we are a buyer seller matching platform with a conference, and that's what gives RESI's partnering platform its incredible power to forge new connections. RESI SF 2018

LaVoieHealthScience Offers Words of Wisdom as You Prepare for #JPM18

As planning for JPM Week moves into full swing, it is time to strategize and plan to optimize your time and budget by aligning your conference strategy with your corporate goals.

First, let's take a look at the decision-making process on attending JPM Week.

- Who should attend from your company? (Investor: CEO, CFO, IRO; Partnering: CEO, Marketing, CSO; Medical: CEO, CSO)
- What is your goal in attending?
- Which conference are you attending?
- Does JPM Week coincide with a major news or corporate goal?
- How is your presenting officer prepared to tell your story? (e.g., developing your story in 15-18 slides)

Thinking beyond JPM Week, LaVoieHealthScience offers a comprehensive list of investor, partnering and medical conferences to aid in your event plans for the new year.

First-time attendee or long-time alum?

At LaVoieHealthScience, we help our clients tell and amplify their stories in unique and compelling ways. Call or email to learn more.

Top Ten BioWeekSF Survival Tips from LaVoieHealthScience

1. The time is now. It's not too early to start outreach to those with whom you want to meet, and it's never too late to stop. While some will fill their calendars early, others know to leave some slots for late-breaking requests (see Tip 10).
2. Extend your reach. Target 20% new names. Not sure how you'll find them? Use the resources of a third party, be it a high-tech platform or a high-touch agency.
3. Refresh your pitch. Some things never change, but others should. Make sure your message and positioning clearly articulate your current vision and opportunity. Need help? Refer to LHS Immersion®.
4. Divide and conquer. Don't do every meeting with every co-worker. Branch off to different meetings and events to ensure full value for your time in San Francisco.
5. Disconnect and conquer. Try turning off your phone. Really. This will force you to focus on the people in front of you.
6. Know your audience. It's tempting to tell your audience everything you possibly can about your product, platform or service. Don't. 15 slides are plenty. See LHS' 15-Slide Presentation® for insight.

7. Don't go too green. It's easy to forego hard copy collateral however a hand-out can support the real-time conversation, while ensuring an imprint beyond the meeting itself. Paper or pixels? Both, please.

8. Consider an Infographic. Pictures are really worth 1,000 words, so there is no need to overwhelm your counterparty with text. Use infographics to depict your company's story in a creative and informative manner.

9. Have (most of) a plan. Things get changed and rescheduled quickly in San Francisco; leave some holes in your calendar for impromptu meetings and on-the-spot networking. You may miss an at-hand opportunity if your scheduled is overbooked.

10. Follow up. Schedule time after you're back in the office to follow up with the contacts you made in San Francisco. Nothing is easier than getting jammed back into your day-to-day work; ensure you've penciled in time to debrief.

FINAL WORDS

California's World-Leading Life Sciences Ecosystem

In California, our life sciences industry is a hotbed of innovation. There are more than 3,200 life sciences companies in our great state, all trying to move the needle on human health, agriculture, biofuels and other areas. These companies have more than 1,200 medicines in the pipeline—and even more diagnostics and devices—to improve patient care and quality of life.

Our high-risk, innovative sector is also an economic engine. Direct, indirect and induced employment in the life sciences industry exceeds 900,000. The average life sciences salary is $113,000 a year. Our sector's revenue exceeded $169 billion and exports topped $22 billion. Life sciences companies paid more than $17 billion in federal, California state and local taxes. In addition, the state attracted more than $6.7 billion in life sciences venture capital investment, and $3.8 billion in NIH grants, to drive basic research at our world class California colleges and research institutions.

The California Life Sciences Association (CLSA) is the largest and most effective non-profit trade association advocating for California's innovative life sciences industry to advance innovation, investment and job creation in the state.

Our ability to support the industry that drives both California's economic engine and future life-saving discoveries and innovations is driven by the work we undertake with policymakers in Sacramento and Washington, DC – work that supports every life sciences organization in California – to identify, advance and advocate for public policies that promote life sciences research, investment, innovation and access. CLSA is proud to represent and support our members in this great state as they continually advance the research, discoveries and innovations that foster, feed and fuel our world-leading life sciences ecosystem.

Sincerely,

Sara Radcliffe
CEO, California Life Sciences Association
